

The VCBC strongly supports the worth and importance of both topical and internal methods of administration for cannabis.

The quick release effect of inhalation:

- ❖ makes acute dose management simple - vital for conditions affected by the sudden onset of symptoms eg. epilepsy, multiple sclerosis
- ❖ leads to a high increase of blood levels of the various active components; followed by a rapid decrease in their effect.
- ❖ can also increase the likelihood of undesirable irritation of the throat and lungs.

Ingestion:

- ❖ allows for a longer period of effect, as well as a slower, eventual increase and decrease in blood concentrations.
- ❖ allows for simple and effective maintenance of ideal blood levels of the various therapeutic compounds within cannabis.
- ❖ an organized routine of oral and/or topical consumption is significantly less expensive than one focused on inhalation

The VCBC is proud to supply several healthy and diverse edible alternatives to inhaled cannabis and we are continually developing new products. All of the products we offer are produced by Food Safe trained VCBC staff, in our bakery facility, ensuring the highest possible standards of quality are met.

Cannabis can reduce pain in two distinct ways that synergize with each other; creating stronger effects than either could alone.

When administered internally, cannabis exerts its effects via the central nervous system (brain and spinal cord) to reduce the intensity of the incoming pain signals.

When administered topically, cannabis acts to reduce pain by directly reducing the peripheral nervous system's sensitivity to pain, thus reducing the number and intensity of pain signals sent to the brain and spinal cord.

The combined use of topical products with some form of internal administration can provide significantly greater pain relief than either could on its own
